While the prevalence of life threatening injuries, life altering illnesses and death is not new in society, the approach to providing family-centred care is evolving. Research has highlighted the value in keeping children informed of serious medical situations involving their loved ones; however, most staff have very little knowledge or training in how to meet the unique needs of this population and can sometimes fear moral distress.

Presentation Objectives:

1. Advocating for children and youth being a part of difficult medical situations.
2. How to navigate common ethical challenges when working with children and youth.
3. Discuss important considerations impacting understanding and coping.
